

"She was trying to drown her baby"

We suspected postpartum depression, but there were no red flags when we saw her. After she left, we reviewed the TOP results, and saw that she had extremely high scores in the violence domain. I called the patient and there was no answer. Something just didn't feel right, so I called the police. When they got there, she was in the midst of trying to drown her child in the bathtub. I shudder to think how it would've turned out without TOP.

"I'm not such a bad kid after all "

We had one young man with a violent past. He'd been kicked out of school - fights - lots of issues. But he made excellent progress and was ready to return to school. Problem was, they wouldn't take him. I worried that it might undo everything we'd accomplished. But he used the TOP report to show how far he'd come; literally held it up and said, "See? You keep saying I'm an animal, I'm not such a bad kid." That convinced them. They took him back, and he did very well. I was really proud of him.

"It was a conversation she was afraid to have"

Honestly? I didn't trust TOP at first. I was like, "Who needs it?" But then, I gave the assessment to a patient I'd been treating for about a year. I knew something was missing, but I didn't know what and she did not reveal what it was. But the TOP showed quite clearly that she was dependent on alcohol. She never mentioned it, never gave any indication, but she felt comfortable putting it down on paper. She was so relieved that the issue came out. I think it made her trust me more, and we could deal with the issue head-on.

"It's like we gave him his life back"

We had a young adult admitted from the ER, a drug overdose. We always try to go beyond just detox, but we could only keep him for five days. It's frustrating because that's just not enough time. Luckily, we'd just started using TOP, which showed a very high mania score. This tipped us off that ongoing bipolar issues were confounding his substance abuse. We arranged for outpatient treatment of his bipolar disorder, which is going well. We really helped this man; he told us, "This is the first time anyone showed interest in all of me."

"I will never, ever forget her"

We had just started a group for adolescent girls, really just a support group, no reason to suspect anything catastrophic. But when we administered the TOP at the first gathering, we saw right away that one girl was suicidal. We hospitalized her right away, but without the TOP, I don't think we'd have known she was in immediate danger. We saved her life that day.
